WILEY X

Wiley X's model Talon ballistic eyewear will now be manufactured in America. The change adheres to a strategic commitment the company has made to produce a greater number of tactical eyewear products in the U.S.A.

"We are American proud, and we believe there is value in fabricating products here in the U.S.," says Wiley X co-owner Myles Freeman, Jr. "We consider the movement toward making more products in America as one that only strengthens our commitment to creating the very best eyewear protection available for those who serve our community and our country."

Featuring an interchangeable smoke and clear lens system, the Wiley X Talon has a wrap-around design that lends superior peripheral vision, all while providing comprehensive eye protection.

Lacy Looks

Inspired by the textile industry, lacy looks hit the streets this summer with perforated patterns and lace prints. Klik style KL-451 from Wescan is a full-rim acetate frame with an eyelet lace pattern on the temples. The openwork translucent design, coupled with the vintage shape, provides a romantic and feminine allure for women. Colors available include black crystal, purple blue, burgundy rose, and khaki crystal.
